Overview

Our vulnerability training is designed for anyone working in the night time economy to learn how to support vulnerable customers. The focus of these sessions is on the different types of vulnerability you will find at night - including vulnerability related to women's safety, violence, drugs, alcohol, drink spiking, domestic violence, sexual assault, and harassment and first dates.

Through the course, we will equip attendees with the tools to identify and support customers who may become vulnerable, either in venues or on the streets. This is a step further than standard safeguarding training, as it teaches attendees how to deal with specific issues that they may encounter as part of their shift, and is built around real case studies and best practice.

The training also empowers staff to recognise hotspots within their venues, enabling their customers to enjoy a safer night out. The training is focused on group activities encouraging participants to think about the venues they work in and the situations they have experienced.

Objectives

1. Enable night time economy businesses to identify and deal with different types of vulnerable people that they might encounter in the night time economy.
2. Teach businesses how to deal with specific issues that they may encounter as part of their shift and is built around real case studies and best practice.

Research

32% of women and 13% of men feel unsafe or very unsafe walking alone at night.<sup>1</sup>

It is estimated that 2 in 3 women have experienced sexual harassment in public spaces.<sup>2</sup>

"Women and girls often feel unsafe on the streets, especially at night."<sup>3</sup>

"We shouldn't have to take flat shoes on a night out just so we can run easier. We shouldn't have to pretend to be on the phone because we're scared to walk down the street in case we get attacked. We shouldn't have to change our route home just so we are walking in street lights."<sup>4</sup>

81 Women have lost their lives to femicide in just 28 weeks.<sup>5</sup>
